The 1993/94 Resource Guide lists hundreds of organizations and agencies that seek to establish equitable sentencing laws and humane conditions of confinement and provide a wide variety of services for prisoners and their families. Also in the guide are state and federal listings for the courts, the legislature and the executive branch.

Before you begin leafing through these pages, a few points should be made about the guide.

While the PRU supports any and all efforts to assist prisoners and their families, no organization included in this guide has an individual endorsement by the PRU, nor does an excluded organization have our disapproval.

The section headings are imperfect. You may not find a listing under the heading that you believe to be most appropriate. This is one of many good reasons to familiarize yourself with the entire guide. Also, an index has been added to assist you in finding specific listings.

Each section lists both prisoner and parolee services. You must read each listing to determine which organizations are currently valuable to you and which will be valuable down the road. There is, however, a section specifically designed for parolees. While most of these listings serve only the parolee population, I encourage all prisoners to read through those pages long before paroling in order to formulate release plans and make contacts.

Lastly, while this guide is by no means complete, it is an excellent beginning. Prisoners, use this guide to supplement other sources for information and advice (counselors, law library, etc.). You must create your own support network both for the time you serve and, perhaps more importantly, for your release. Firm up your parole plans. Do not hesitate to write organizations that may be of assistance. Successful reintegration into the community will demand considerable effort.

Send in any questions, comments, corrections, or ideas to: Editor, PRU, PO Box 1019, Sacramento, CA 95812.

COMMUNITY CORRECTIONS

The following is a listing of community corrections programs for CDC inmates. They are work furlough programs, alternatives to incarceration for low-level offenders, and Return To Custody centers. The programs vary in their ability to provide drug counseling, education, and vocational training. To enter one of the work furlough programs, contact your pre-release counselor at the prison nine months in advance of your release date. Usually, the program must be located in the county of your offense in order for you to be placed there. Women, also notice that some of the mother/infant centers also have work furlough programs.

PUBLICATIONS

Below is a partial listing of publications that may be of particular interest to the incarcerated. Some are legal and self-help books; others are newspapers and magazines. You may want to ask someone on the outside to stop into book stores and ask for donations off of their shelves. Also, if you have a particular interest, you may want to write to different book stores (look in the telephone directory) and make a request. Send a SASE and see what happens. Lastly, according to Penal Code §2601(c), California prisoners are allowed to receive publications (with some exceptions) sent through the United States Post Office. If this right is being denied, you should file a 602, and file a writ of habeas corpus if the administrative appeal fails to remedy the situation.

The Prisoners' Rights Union relies on you to support three major goals: (1) the restoration of human rights of prisoners; (2) the achievement of equitable sentencing laws; (3) safe and healthy conditions for those individuals incarcerated in California's prisons and jails.

These goals are achieved through litigation, group advocacy, and legislative lobbying; and by providing resource and legal self-help materials.

WHY SUPPORT THE PRISONERS' RIGHTS UNION?

Your support funds PRU projects and makes it possible for indigent prisoners to receive a free subscription to The California Prisoner.

Prisoners in correctional institutions are vulnerable since they are subjected to conditions, regulations, and treatment over which they have no control.

These prisoners have been segregated from the rest of society for their crimes and have very little money or access to the resources that can help them.

- Your tax-deductible contribution funds programs that help protect the civil rights of incarcerated men and women.
- Your membership strengthens our members for our lobbying initiatives.
- You can help with your personal support of legislation that guarantees the humane treatment of the imprisoned or your opposition to legislation that curtails the rights of incarcerated men and women.
